End of Year First Day School Picnic & African Peacemaker

On the afternoon of June 10, in the Quaker Cemetery in Prospect Park, the children of Brooklyn Meeting shared the sandwiches they had made with Meeting Friends. In addition to enjoying the beautiful surroundings, the group welcomed Adrien Niyongabo, Coordinator of “Healing and Rebuilding Our Community in Burundi, Africa.”

Adrien described growing up with parents from the two sides—Tutsi and Hutu—of the terrible genocide that took place in Burundi. Today his commitment is healing the wounds of the past by working together hand in hand for the future. He described how the “Goat Exchange Project” was born. Tutsi women from a displaced person’s camp were each paired with a Hutu woman who had stayed in her community. They were given a pregnant goat to care for together and so had to visit each other’s homes. One woman kept the goat, the other the kid and they each paired with others in the same way. As the groups have multiplied, conflicts and difficulties have developed and the groups have had to resolve them together. Trust and friendships have been created as well. This project was originally funded by Quakers from Olympia, Washington.

Brooklyn Quakers

Who Are We? What Do We Believe? What is Our Message to the World?

These and other profound questions were explored by a large group of Friends on the afternoon of First Day, June 10. Presenters shared quotations from James Naylor and Jean Toomer’s “Interpretation of Friends Worship.”

Friends described their own beliefs as individual and changing, a “continuing revelation” expressed through the Quaker idea of “seeking”. They struggled with describing the worship experience, as it happens to the worshiper at an emotional level deeper than words. For example, one Friend said, “We do not believe in God. We know God.” Though worship is individual, Friends are bound together by the power of shared silence and participating in a “covered meeting.” Brooklyn Friends, sitting in silence together week after week, share an unseen bond.

“We are called into the deep enduring love of God and man and all creation. Worship is a door into that love. Once we have entered it, our every act is a prayer, our whole life a continuous worship.” [From “Interpretation of Friends Worship,” p. 12]

Brooklyn Quaker Joins the Search for Peace and Reunification in Korea

Recently returned from South Korea

Kathryn Munnell represented our Meeting as part of a long standing Quaker concern for North and South Korea. It was Quakers who nominated Ham Sok Hon for the Nobel Peace Prize in the aftermath of World War II, in recognition of his crusade and many imprisonments while working for the cause of reconciliation and political freedom in both Koreas. Some of his papers are stored at Pendle Hill in Pennsylvania.

Kathryn has been serving as a voluntary educator at the Border Peace School, serving refugees from North Korea on the border. Now back in the U.S, she is developing a Peace Curriculum for learning to read in English, using simplified selections from Tolstoy and other writers about Peace.

She also tells us about “Women Making Peace,” a Korean organization that combines the concerns of peace, reunification and gender in the Koreas. This group has helped and protected women refugees from the North who are resettling in the South, and encourages visitation back and forth.

Near the Border Peace School is Mt. Soie. Every day, “peace pilgrims” from around the world silently climb the mountain and meditate at the top while viewing the “other Korea,” tangibly and spiritually experiencing the separation and the dream of reconciliation that is the story of Korea.

Friends who are curious about an exciting opportunity in peacemaking can talk to Kathryn about the possibility of volunteering to teach English at the Border Peace School in South Korea from February to June of 2013.

June Meeting for Business Documents and Revisions

New Brooklyn Meeting Treasurer Danielle Dybiec continued her search for truth in Meeting financial documents, providing revisions and corrections in a new Treasurer’s report.

The committee revising our “Blue Book” of committee duties led a review of the text and suggested revisions. Those wanting to read the text at their leisure can find it on the Meeting’s website. A lively discussion, with many constructive questions and suggestions, ensued. The process continues.
